

North Dakota's Preserve Visitation Guidelines

You are invited to observe the preserves in North Dakota but remember that your visit has an impact.

Most of The Nature Conservancy preserves in North Dakota are open year-round for hiking, birdwatching, photography, educational and other passive recreational uses. Each preserve has something special to offer at every time of the year.

The Conservancy's preserves protect plants, animals, and natural communities and the biological diversity they represent. They are frequently used for scientific study and education.

While nearly all of our preserves are open to the public, they are private properties and subject to rules to protect their natural features. Access to some areas is restricted based upon the rarity or sensitivity of what is being protected, and some preserves can only be visited for educational or research purposes with written permission from Conservancy staff.

The following guidelines should be followed to protect these special places.

Preparation: The Key to a Safe, Enjoyable Visit

To minimize disturbance to wild places, we do not maintain trail infrastructure or facilities, and you will not find any staff on duty at the preserves. Therefore, we ask you to prepare for your visit and take proper precautions while on site.

- Wear comfortable footwear suitable for hiking.
- To protect yourself from ticks, poison ivy or poison sumac, wear long pants, and tuck them into your socks.
- To get the most from your visit, and to protect yourself from the elements, you may want to bring the following items:
 - Binoculars
 - Camera
 - Compass
 - Field guides (to wildflowers, birds, butterflies and other natural features)
 - Insect repellent
 - Rain gear
 - Small first aid kit
 - Snack (fruit or trail mix)
 - Sunscreen
 - Water (dehydration is a serious risk at any time of the year)

What You Can Do

The following activities are permitted on Conservancy preserves:

- Birdwatching
- Cross-country skiing
- Hiking
- Nature study
- Snowshoeing
- Photography and videotaping for personal use (if for commercial use, you must obtain permission from the Conservancy first)

What You Cannot Do

Please help us protect our preserves by strictly avoiding the following activities while visiting:

- Use of motorized vehicles of any sort, including ATVs, motorcycles and snowmobiles, except on public roads
- Biking and mountain biking
- Camping
- To protect sensitive natural features and as a courtesy to other visitors, pets - as a general rule - are prohibited.
- Carrying of firearms or archery equipment on preserves closed to hunting
- Dumping of refuse
- Feeding animals, including birds or fish.
- Fires or gathering of firewood
- Horseback riding
- Introducing exotic plant or animal species (those that are not native to a particular area).
- Picking or digging up any tree, shrub, flower, grass, or removing any rocks, minerals or prehistoric or historic artifacts
- Prospecting for minerals or metals
- Picking of berries, nuts or mushrooms for other than personal use
- Placement of permanent structures including deer stands
- Target practice

Hunting and Fishing Activities

North Dakota has a long tradition of hunting, passed on from generation to generation. It's an important part of our history, culture and economy. Hunters were some of the early conservationists in our state, and they continue to support habitat protection through hunting license fees and taxes on guns and ammunition.

The Nature Conservancy provides hunting opportunities at all five of our preserves in North Dakota.

Hunting is an important management tool for the Conservancy, particularly to reduce the damage to native plant communities from white-tail deer. With the increase in human population and fragmentation of land due to conversion for development, energy use and agriculture, the lands available for hunting in North Dakota are decreasing.

The Conservancy's work to protect more than 41,000 acres in North Dakota since 1981 protects the habitat that game species and other wildlife need to survive and provides places where young and old alike can enjoy hunting and other recreational activities.

While all of our preserves in North Dakota provide hunting opportunities, there are restrictions to protect sensitive natural areas. Hunters must comply with all of our hunting rules. See the individual preserve webpages for rules and, if applicable, permit information.

- Permit Required
 - Brown Ranch (No hunting of sharp-tailed grouse or prairie chickens.)
 - Pigeon Point (No hunting of sharp-tailed grouse or prairie chickens.)
 - Cross Ranch (Open only for deer-hunting in the North Unit.)
- No Permit Needed
 - Davis Ranch
 - John E. Williams Preserve

Policy on Dogs at Preserves

To protect sensitive natural features and as a courtesy to other visitors, pets—as a general rule—are prohibited.

- Service dogs are allowed at all preserves in North Dakota.
- Hunting dogs are allowed only during hunting season at North Dakota preserves that are open to hunting.

Precautions

- Do not remove any stakes, signs or other objects—they may be part of a research project.
- Use trails and firebreaks where these are present. Do not make new trails.
- Because seeds stick to shoes and clothing, you may introduce weeds into the preserve without knowing it. Inspect pant legs and shoes to remove seeds before entering.
- Avoid walking on boggy, wet areas—they are more sensitive to the effects of foot traffic.
- If you flush a ground-nesting bird, stop and avoid walking near the bird's nest.
- Give wide berth to livestock, which may be grazing on TNC preserves.
- Close any gates that you open.
- The Conservancy conducts prescribed burns to control invasive species. Please be on the lookout for Conservancy burn crews in the spring and fall.
- During the fall hunting season, hunters may be near or on Conservancy property; wear bright, visible clothing.
- Be aware of your surroundings; large predators such as bears, wolves and mountain lions may be present on some Conservancy preserves.

Please report problems like trash, damage or broken signage by calling (612) 331-0700.

Respect Our Neighbors' Property

A reminder: our preserves are often adjacent to private land. The Nature Conservancy respects and recognizes the rights and responsibilities of private property ownership. Please do not trespass on private property adjacent to Conservancy preserves. Property lines are clearly marked with small yellow signs featuring the Conservancy's logo.
